

"Please explain why you have chosen to apply for this programme and why it is now the correct time in your life to do so?"

A major factor in my decision to enrol in the Business Management Program at Leeds Trinity University is that I am a dedicated and hardworking young man who is trustworthy and eager to learn new skills. My enjoyment of working in a fast-paced environment is reflected in my ability to provide a positive mood to the team at all times. I am equally effective either working alone or as a member of a larger group of people. During my spare time, I enjoy participating in sports as well as watching movies and documentaries. I have a good background in business management, as evidenced by the fact that I have previously completed two internships in the field of business administration. By enrolling in a Business Management degree at Leeds Trinity University, I hope to broaden my knowledge and passion in the field of business administration even more. I'm also looking forward to taking advantage of all of the opportunities that life at Leeds Trinity University has to offer since I feel that now is the best moment for me to do so given that I have gained the necessary professional and educational experience. "What we remember are moments, not days," Cesare Pavese is credited with saying famously. I'm confident that many of these experiences would be valuable for me to have throughout my time at university.

"How have your previous work experience and/or education prepared you for studying your chosen course?"

In order to enhance my studies and get practical experience in the field of company management and administration, I undertook a two-week work placement at the Bespoke Kitchen Company. I got the chance to see and engage in a range of facets of the company's operations throughout my time here. In today's context, they emphasised the significance of communication in general, as well as image and advertising in particular. They were joined by a group of additional speakers who shared their viewpoints. They first assigned me the responsibility of updating spreadsheets with information on order statuses and other information after seeing my significant interest in mathematics and data management. Customers were also given tours of the showrooms, allowing me to show them the excellent quality of the kitchens that had been built and urge them to buy the essential equipment. Another storey was my involvement in the creation of an illustration representing a kitchen that was published in a local magazine in order to raise corporate awareness.

I'm thinking of getting a bachelor's degree in business administration at the undergraduate level because of my personal interest in the subject and my past career successes.

"Why have you applied to study Business/ Health and Social Care? Where do you hope your chosen course will take you?"

I've studied everything from exploiting digital technology for viral campaigns to how marketing might assist the British industry prosper in the shadow of Hollywood in high school business management studies. Learn how to utilise marketing and commercial management to aid the success of international films. The study of the English language has enhanced my ability to communicate effectively via language and raised my knowledge of the power of words. All three disciplines have benefited in the development of my analytical and critical thinking talents by supporting me in understanding and appreciating the creation and influence of a varied variety of media products and texts. In a world where businesses' prosperity is reliant on technical advances, I've been intrigued by modern, digital changes such as the move from taxis to Uber and Blockbuster to Netflix.

I've always been interested in information technology and system advancements, and I intend to study these at university. As part of my GCSE ICT, I was ecstatic to be able to use my previous computer abilities in a corporate situation. I plan to learn from the Learning & Teaching Strategy for the Business Management Program, which emphasises on the fundamental pillars of Employability and Entrepreneurship that Leeds Trinity instils in all students. To do this, a number of actions are taken. In addition, I'm curious about how Leeds Trinity University has established a strong reputation for enhancing student employability by assisting students in their transition from undergraduate to graduate studies and incorporating applicable skills into every aspect of their academic programme of study.

My academic year ended with a speech day at my school, where I received the 2020 Information Technology Student Award. In Sixth Form, I enjoyed the microeconomics challenge since it allowed me to apply my present knowledge to business and marketing strategy while also laying the groundwork for innovation theory. I learned about the rapid emergence of new technology in geography class. I opted to read 'Digital Disruption: The Next Innovation Wave' as a consequence of my study. I learned about "digital disruptors" mindsets and the importance of innovation in establishing a competitive edge in the industry. This, I believe, gives us a peek into the future of information systems. I developed a better grasp of computer operations. I am well-versed in the prospects for digital innovation in the workplace because of my history in sales development.

"What difficulties or challenges do you foresee, how will you deal with these?"

Following their first adjustment to their new surroundings, it is common for college students to become unsatisfied with the differences between university and high school education as they get a better understanding of themselves. There are a variety of consequences that might arise from this incident, including difficulty in class and the assignment of additional work, as well as the possibility of being held accountable for my own time management, to mention a few examples. As I have discovered, the formation of meaningful relationships with other people, involvement in study groups, and the capacity to take excellent notes have all proven to be really beneficial for me. Several services, including note-taking software and leadership development courses, are offered via the Student Success Office to assist students in their transition to and success in university. Trying to get to know the instructors better is another goal I would like to achieve; as a result, whenever I have the opportunity, I will try to introduce myself to them. When I've been having difficulties with my schoolwork, I've found their assistance to be quite valuable.

Personal Statement

My desire to communicate through writing sparked an interest in business and management. I'm intrigued by an innovative business concept. I've long been captivated by the notion of running a business and the inherent hazards. David Lester's book "How They Started" served as an inspiration for this composition. After all, as Peter K. Kindersley, Dorling Kindersley's founder, famously noted, "if I have an idea and everyone thinks it's ridiculous, it's ludicrous." Dorling Kindersley is a renowned publishing firm that began with a single "crazy" idea. Following this, I was inspired to generate a few of my own ideas.

The first is to operate an ice cream truck in France, which has aroused my attention. Ice cream vendors are badly underrepresented in France, where I just spent time. For the second time, I'm planning an assault course. "The Crocky Trail," an assault course in Cheshire, was unlike anything I'd ever seen. Mr. James Wally, the director of "The Crocky Trail" and the son of its founder, consented to meet with me after we exchanged emails. We discussed the difficulties he had while running the Crocky trail, as well as his concerns regarding his personal safety.

On the contrary, working at the Bespoke Kitchen Company taught me how a business runs. Throughout my time with the organisation, I observed and assisted in a variety of areas. They emphasised the critical nature of communication, brand image, and, in particular, advertising. They assigned me the task of populating spreadsheets with information about the orders placed after I demonstrated an interest in arithmetic and data processing. Additionally, I accompanied them on a showroom visit to illustrate the kitchens' excellence and to urge them to purchase them. I assisted with a photo shoot to showcase the firm's kitchen, which was published in a local magazine. My motivation for pursuing a business degree sprang from my excitement and success at work.

Throughout my A-level business and mathematics subjects, I honed my ability to analyse data and form conclusions. As a result, it has become one of my favourite areas of study within business and mathematics. Due to my analytical thinking, I've succeeded in science-related areas, but I'm a well-rounded individual with a varied collection of abilities and expertise. My eleven As and A*s in GCSE attest to this. Having the ability to overcome a range of challenges, in my opinion, is crucial for success as a businessperson.

Outside of school, I like participating in extracurricular activities. Debating has taught me how to think and speak quickly under pressure, as well as how to communicate my opinions effectively and succinctly to an audience. Additionally, despite being a two-year member of the school's rugby team, I serve as captain of my house team. As a result of these activities, my ability to lead and interact with others in a group situation would have increased. Being a successful team member requires a great deal of effort, which is why I selected Leeds Trinity University to advance my profession.
